

White motorists slain on SA Roads

Written by Praag and Beeld

Monday, 10 May 2010 05:56 - Last Updated Monday, 10 May 2010 06:43

---

Mr Gideon Ehlers, an engineer of occupation and a father of two sons, was killed this weekend when a rock "as big as a wheel" was thrown onto his moving car from an overhead bridge, reported the Afrikaans newspaper Beeld on Monday.

According to the newspaper this is only one of several such alarming incidents over the weekend. Mr Berto Engelbrecht was on his way home on Friday afternoon via the N1 north when a rock was thrown through his windshield from the overhead Ben-Schoeman intersection bridge. "The road surface irritated me and I was driving across two of the lanes. The fact that I did that was only mercy and probably kept me from sustaining serious injuries." said Engelbrecht. "I heard one heck of a noise and saw glass shattering". The rock had hit his car on the passenger's side of the vehicle.

The article continues to describe several other similar incidents which occurred during the past week

No arrests have been reported in this regard.